

I feel strongly that location determining systems being included in VoIP equipment would be an unnecessary burden on both the agencies involved, and the users. I understand the value of 911 positioning, but VoIP will never have the range to justify this measure. These devices may serve a similar purpose, but they are not equivalent to cellular telephones in most respects.